BY GUS MALBERT.

This is an unusual story. The foreword is given so that all may know that it is unusual. Once, oh, a very long time ago, we were in the habit of writing that a certain young man with hopes and longings to establish a permanent connection between things of this world and other things of the other world was being pursued by the most inexorable jinx that ever bought a city license to do jinxing.

We are not disputing the right of any legitimately licensed jinx to profit by his trade and calling. Rather are we offering objections to a jinx being off the job, especially while enjoying the hospitality of Richmond. In this objection we have the moral, though not the actual, support of Bill Lipscomb, who again is hovering in our midst, along with Buck Pressly and some several other young men who write their names in the register of the hotel as from Roanoke.

Returning to the subject matter of our story, it so happened that Pahson Perryman, a young gentleman who first gained notoriety as being the best pitcher Richmond ever had, in spite of the fact that he couldn't win a ball game, so good a pitcher, indeed, that John J. McGraw, considered the best judge of pitchers there are, since Rachel proved the value of hers by taking it to the well for seven long years—anyway, this Pahson Perryman person, coming from Georgia, with a whole family of jinxes following in his wake, beat us a ball game in ten innings by the score of 2 to 1.

There you have it all and it might be, though they had opportunities before. In the ninth Newton drove a three-base hit to deep centre and scored when Laval hit through Truscott. There were none down at this time, but Perry gathered himself, and no further damage resulted.

They went into the tenth with the score tied, and this is how Roanoke won. Welsch hit to left, and only a pretty stop by Charlie Pies kept his knock to a single. Perry sacrificed and Gooley hit to Newton. Doc booted and pulled a bone when he tossed the ball toward first, as there wasn't the ghost of a chance to catch the runner. His toss was over Haley's head, and he never got his chance to do it again.
